Prior to taking office, the former Davao city mayor made the war on drugs as part of a campaign which secured his landslide victory in the general elections in May.

According to The Sydney Morning Herald, Duterte had earlier pledged to pardon police officers accused of rights abuses. The 71-year-old premier also compared himself to the Ugandan dictator Idi Amin.

"I will retire with the reputation of Idi Amin," he said, alluding to the African leader who ordered extrajudicial killings during his rule in the 1970s. "I will not let my country go to the dogs."
